GALICIA · SPAIN · EUROPE

This guide is designed to introduce you to our many tourist attractions and is packed with ideas and plans for exploring this fun-filled city. It includes information about accommodation options, getting around the city, museums, historic buildings, parks, gardens, squares, beaches, city routes and events that take place each year.

A Coruña and the world

GALICIA · SPAIN · EUROPE

A Coruña, situated on the north-west coast of Spain, is a major Atlantic commercial port. The city stands on a peninsula connected to the mainland by a narrow isthmus with two maritime fronts: on the one side the port, facing the coastal inlet of the Ría da Coruña, and on the other side the city's main beaches, Riazor and Orzán, bathed by the open sea.

historic events

chronology

History has shaped the city of A Coruña.

The Pre-Roman period

The Artabri tribe inhabited the area that today is known as the Ártabro Gulf. The remains of the Elviña castro or Iron Age fortified settlement are testimony to these Pre-Roman centres of population.

61 BCE

Julius Caesar disembarked in the 'Great Gulf of the Artabri', just outside the modern-day city of A Coruña in search of tin and gold. Forty years later, the legions of the Emperor Augustus would annex Gallaecia to the Roman Empire.

1st century CE

The Romans built the lighthouse known as 'the Tower of Hercules', a clear indication of the importance of maritime trade in the waters that bathed A Coruña.

1208

Alphonse IX, King of León, ordered the re-founding of the town, famed for its lighthouse, granting it a town charter, as well as a series of other rights and privileges. 'Crunia' was part of the quarter known today as the 'Old City', overlooking the port.

1446

King John II raised the status of the town to that of a city, and authorised free trade with England.

1520

King Charles I held court in the city and also set sail from its port to be crowned Holy Roman Emperor in Germany.

1522

The Spice Exchange was founded in A Coruña, bringing prosperity to the city, but also converting it into target for pirates and enemies of the Crown.

1587

Work began on the construction of the San Antón fortress under the orders of King Charles I.

1589

English troops, led by the privateer Francis Drake, were ordered to attack and lay siege to A Coruña by Elizabeth I, Queen of England. Local heroine María Pita headed the defence of the city.

1778

King Charles III authorised the start of trading operations between the port of A Coruña and America.

1788

Eustaquio Giannini commenced the major renovation of the Tower of Hercules. The project preserved the monument's Roman remains and provided an exhibition space for them.

1809

The British general Sir John Moore was mortally wounded in the Battle of Elviña, which took place on the outskirts of A Coruña and was one of the principal and bloodiest confrontations fought in Galicia during the Peninsular War.

19th century

A growing population led to changes in the city's appearance, as well as improvements to its thoroughfares. Public buildings were constructed in the Pescadería district, originally a fishing quarter, and the tobacco factory began production in the area known as A Palloza. In 1857, the factory's female workers, known as cigarreras, demonstrated on the factory roofs, demanding better rights. It was during this period that the foundations were laid for the modern city.

20th century

New industries and overseas trade allowed for the expansion of the city and the building of luxurious homes in the Modernist and eclectic styles. Industrial growth would also lead to the consolidation of a strong trade union movement in the city.

1936

Local resident Santiago Casares Quiroga was appointed President of the Council of Ministers. During his term as President, he held the referendum on Galicia's Statute of Autonomy.

1986

Work began on Europe's largest urban sea promenade.

2009

On 27th June 2009 the Tower of Hercules, the only working Roman lighthouse, was included on the World Heritage List. The UNESCO committee made particular reference to the outstanding 18th century restoration work.

Nowadays

Modern-day A Coruña is an open, outgoing and dynamic city. It boasts a major port, making it an attractive destination, as well as a city of commerce and trade and is firmly positioned at the forefront of the latest trends in Atlantic gastronomy. It is a major reference in the worlds of fashion and culture both here and throughout the world.

María Pita

Sigrás, 1565 - 1643

In 1589, the troops led by the corsair Francis Drake attacked the city on the orders of Queen Elizabeth I of England. María Pita's husband died during the struggle. Filled with rage, she seized the English flag from a lance, killing Francis Drake's brother as she cried out in Galician "Quen teña honra que me siga" ("Let all men and women of honour follow me"). María Pita and the city's 4,000 inhabitants put up a successful fight against the 12,000 strong English army.

This is our tower, our landmark. Its silhouette mirrored on the ocean reflects the Atlantic character of the people of A Coruña. The Tower of Hercules is part of our heritage and, since 2009, a World Heritage Site.

A truly unique monument, and also the world's oldest working lighthouse. Built by the Romans in the 1st century CE, the original construction was lower, wider and featured an exterior ramp used to take the wood that fuelled the fire up to the top of the tower.

In 1788, Eustaquio Giannini, aided by city alderman José Cornide, embarked on an ambitious plan to renovate the tower. This is the Tower that stands out against the magnificent early evening skies of A Coruña.

This museum-park, nestling in the Ártabro Gulf, covers the entire peninsula where the Tower of Hercules stands, and includes the areas known as Punta Herminia, O Acoroado and Cabal de Pradeira. The sculptures have been cleverly arranged to establish an ongoing dialogue with the lighthouse. It is an area dotted with cliffs, islets, and sea caves, known locally as furnas, as well as small beaches.

The Atlantic and its winds, characterised by blustery and salty squalls, shape the landscape and determine the park's flora and fauna. Conditions here are harsh, and only the strongest, most unique and special species will survive. After all, what doesn't kill you makes you stronger.

Picasso House Museum

This traditional late 19th century town house was the family home. Visitors can tour the rooms where Picasso and his father once painted.

In the 19th century the city provided a home and care for a child named Pablo Ruiz. A young yet immensely talented boy who years later would revolutionise the parameters of contemporary art. The Ruiz Picasso family home in the heart of the city can still be visited today. The patriarch, a teacher at the School of Arts and Crafts, instilled his love of painting in his family.

And so it was that the young Picasso began to express his feelings and sentiments through sketches and paintings. The beach, the bullring, the Tower of Hercules, the marina, his friends and even the beggars on the street...all perfect excuses to give full rein to his talent on any surface.

His younger sister Conchita died of diphtheria the very year that the family decided to leave the city. Part of this great artist would remain in the city for ever. The city he grew up in, where he played and painted, is the same that today provides endless inspiration for those that stroll around its streets.

Tradition has it that the Apostle Saint James the Greater preached in the far west of the region that is today known as Galicia, and which in the 1st century CE was considered by the Romans to be the end of the world. In the 9th century a site was discovered containing what was believed to be the Apostle's tomb.

This discovery led to a surprisingly large movement of pilgrims from all over Europe throughout the Middle Ages, which resulted in the founding of the city of Santiago de Compostela and its cathedral. Many of these pilgrims travelled by sea, making the voyage from all the European countries that lined the Atlantic seaboard such as Poland, Sweden and many others.

Practically all these seafaring pilgrims sailed to the city of A Coruña, which had been founded in 1208. This was due to its proximity to Santiago, a mere 75 km away, and the wealth of services available in the port.

The English formed the largest group of pilgrims, and so this route became known as The English Way. In the 1990s it was restored as a pilgrim trail. Santiago Cathedral grants the Compostela, the official pilgrimage certificate, to all those that complete the Way from A Coruña under certain conditions.
